Samsung reportedly in talks to buy US data-centre cooling specialist Modine

Modine was worth about $5.6 billion before the news. It traded at $136.90 after hours on November 12, up $30.80, or 29.03%.

The AI gold rush has a heat problem, and Samsung wants to own the fix. The Korean giant is reportedly in talks to buy Modine, a Wisconsin firm that makes the systems keeping data centres from overheating.

The numbers explain the interest. Modine’s data-centre sales jumped 95% last quarter to $440 million, and its shares rose 29% on the report.

The bigger story is where the money is moving. After chips and power, cooling is the next bottleneck in AI infrastructure. Samsung already bought Europe’s FläktGroup last year, and Modine would be a much bigger bet.
